

Access to USIP Experts

Whether you are in-person or virtual, our experts are still available to connect with you and your students on important global issues of conflict and peace. If you would like a virtual guest speaker for your class or if you have an individual student seeking resources on a country or issue on which USIP works, please send us a request.

Content About Current Events

USIP's website provides free articles (including a student-friendly blog), podcasts, webcast and recorded events, and videos on today's pressing conflicts and peacebuilding stories, including a series of articles on how COVID-19 is affecting some of the world's most vulnerable populations.

Free Educator Resources

The Public Education section of the USIP website offers educator resources that can be used inside the classroom – or outside, during remote learning. These include lesson plans, activities, study guides, simulations, and multimedia that can help teachers bring global conflict and peacebuilding content to their students. You can access all of these resources from home.

USIP's Virtual Resources for Teachers & Schools

The Public Education team and all of us at the U.S. Institute of Peace deeply appreciate all that educators are doing to continue working with students during the coronavirus pandemic.

We know that it can be hard to sort through all the resources available to you during this time. To help you, we have pulled together a list of existing virtual resources from USIP on international conflict and peace for teachers and students. Please let us know if there are other ways we might support you.

Online Learning Opportunities

USIP provides free micro-courses on key themes and skills in international conflict management and peacebuilding, which teachers can assign to students or use to brush up your own skills and content knowledge. Public Education at USIP offers online professional development for educators on how to integrate this content into your existing curriculum.

"Virtual visits" to USIP's headquarters

Since schools can't come to us right now, we're bringing a version of our one-hour onsite educational program to audiences around the country. You can see inside our iconic headquarters and speak to someone about USIP's mission and work – submit a request anytime.

Thank you for your continued dedication to your students, and for your interest in the international issues on which USIP works.

If you have questions about any of our virtual resources or would like to explore ways to use them with your students, please contact Megan Chabalowski.